Here is the class: class Simple(object): def __init__(self): self.resource = self.get_resource() def get_resource(self): self.resource = " print(resource) And here is what I'm trying to do:

from.simple import Simple source = Simple() print(source.resource) However, this gives me an error saying that the Simple class is not defined and if I try to access resource in the init function, it returns the same error. I've tried to put the resource assignment and print in `__init__` but it still doesn't work. How do I call Simple's function `get_resource` from outside the Simple class? A: This is how you access classes methods from outside the class. For your particular case, you should do:

class Simple(object): def __init__(self): self.resource = self.get_resource()
print(self.resource) def get_resource(self): self.resource =
" print(self.resource) Q:

Randomizing list of strings using only Java I'm trying to read a file of text and be able to randomize the order of that text. I want to do it without changing the contents of the string/text file. I'm only a beginner at programming, but I've managed to make a piece of code that splits up my file in lines and in turn into the list of strings. I want to shuffle that list. Currently the code looks like this:
